

been terribly wronged. Perhaps, for example, someone accidentally bumps into (56) them or mistakenly says something offensive; in this type of situation, they create a serious confrontation. While it is true that other people will try hard not to provoke this type of person, it is also true that others (60) will make (58) an effort to avoid spending much time in the company of such a person. Thus, people who get involved in confrontations easily will find it hard to develop close friendships and relationships with others (60). (8 errors)

4. I try to do (58) the right thing by avoiding either extreme type of behavior. I always try to behave in a like (59) manner, without overreacting or underreacting. If someone offends me by (56) chance, I try to brush it off (57) and keep on (56) going as if nothing had happened to (57) me. If someone intentionally succeeds in (56) bothering me, however, I try to react without anger but with a reaction that shows that behavior like (59) this is unacceptable. In this way, I do not make (58) the mistake of wasting time on unimportant situations, but I prevent other (60) instances of bad behavior toward me from (56) recurring. (11 errors)
